The Declaration of Independence, adopted by the original thirteen states, is a fitting symble of our nations Bicentennial.

Without the efforts of the great men of our First Congress we may never have become an independent nation.

The reason I chose the picture of the NORTH CHURCH is because when Revere saw the 2 lanterns he started the long ride to freedom. The spirit of freedom spread at the speed of light throughout the colonies. It was almost instantaneous. Light is a sign of freedom and it all started in Boston on the night of Paul Revere's ride.

This is also a good representation because the light of the 2 lanterns was light in a storm of darkness, it showed a way out of despair, tyranny, and oppression.

This stamp idea represents the Declaration of Independence - written by Thomas Jefferson and a few others. The Declaration of Independence was signed first by John Hancock on July 4, 1776. This Declaration started the Revolutionary War - which got the United States of America its freedom.
